

Tenants of Foreclosed Property

If you are a tenant, you have rights. This document gives you some information about your rights when your landlord is in foreclosure.

You cannot be evicted just because the property is in foreclosure. Under D.C. law, you have the right to stay and pay rent to the bank, Mortgage Company or new owner. If you are a tenant, and the landlord is in foreclosure, you do not have to leave.

If you have been told that your home is in foreclosure, there are some things you can do to protect yourself. For example:

- Let the new owner know you are there. If you have received notice from a bank or from the bank's lawyer about the foreclosure, make sure they know you are a tenant.

The next page is a sample form that you can fill out and send in. You can send this form to whoever sent you the notice about the foreclosure. To be safe, send the form certified mail so you can prove it was received. We suggest that you also send a photocopy of your lease along with the form.

If you have a housing voucher, you should inform the new owner, and you should ask the new owner to cooperate by "leasing up" with the voucher program.

- Find out where you should start sending your rent. If your home has a new owner, including a bank, you should start sending your rent to the new owner. The new owner should respond to your sending in the attached form by telling you where to send your rent check. If you get no answer, or if the due date for your rent to be paid is approaching, try to contact the bank, Mortgage Company or new owner, or its attorney, and ask for an address where you can pay rent.
- Contact a lawyer for advice. If you have questions about what your rights are, you should talk to a lawyer right away. Some people who can help are:
